Transform your text instructions into Excel formulas in seconds with the help of AI.

Problem → Formula

Turn your spreadsheet problem into a formula in seconds.

The screenshot shows the excelformulabot website interface. On the left is a sidebar with the logo, a user profile for 'david bressler', and navigation links for 'Generator', 'Formula Bot' (highlighted), 'Archive', and 'Account'. The main area has a heading 'Be as specific as possible, ex: referring to specific rows, columns and cells.*' and a link 'Review best practices.'. Below this is a text input field containing the instruction: 'If cell A1 is less than 10 then show "yes," if not show "no"'. A green 'Submit' button is positioned below the input. Under the 'Output:' label, the generated formula is displayed: '=IF(A1<10,"yes","no")'. A chat bubble icon is visible in the bottom right corner of the interface.

Since the advent of commercial flights in the 1950s, transport hasn't radically changed. Our cars, ships, trains, planes and even bicycles may have had their functionality improved over the years, but they have essentially remained the same since their invention. But we're about to see the pace of change revving up dramatically.

Why transport needs to change
Now we have the speed and immediacy of the internet, it's easy to forget how Henry Ford's 'car for the great
